NEW HOTEL.

THE subscriber has recently opened a Temperance Hotel and Boarding House in Springfield, Illinois, fifty yards east of the Globe Hotel. No pains has been spared in fitting up and furnishing the house, and employing the best cooks and servants. The table will at all times be furnished with the best the country affords.

I therefore flatter myself, by unremitting attention to merit a share of public patronage. Fifteen or twenty boarders can be well accommodated if they apply soon.

A good stable is attached to the house well furnished with horse feed; also a good house for carriages.

AUCTION, COMMISSION AND GENERAL AGENCY.
B. S. CLEMENT & WM. PORTER,

HAVE entered into partnership under the firm and style of CLEMENT & PORTER, for the purpose of carrying on the above business in all its various branches, in Springfield, Illinois. They will receive goods of every description to sell either at auction or private sale; and they flatter themselves, from the present and rapidly increasing population of the town and country, that an extensive business in that line can be done.

Persons having goods to dispose of in that way, will find it to their interest to consign to them.

Sales of real and personal property of every description will also be made.

Any orders in the above line confided to them, will meet with prompt attention.

To the Readers of the Old Soldier.

Some time since the undersigned sent a Circular to particular individuals in several Counties of this State, urging them to use their best exertions to organize, and form into "battle array" the friends of Gen. Harrison, for the approaching contest. This Circular we marked "Confidential." We did so, because we knew, that nothing short of the utmost secrecy, on the part of even our own friends, could enable it to "clear the clutches" of the Post Office, and reach any tolerable portion of its points of destination. As we anticipated, it has been pirated from the mail, and published in the Van Buren papers. Of course, all copies of it, which have not reached their addresses, will not now be permitted to do so. We therefore urge upon our friends in those counties which this circular has never reached, (if the paper containing this article shall ever reach them) to go to work, and organize themselves in the most officient manner, for routing the enemies of the country and of Gen. Harrison, from the councils of the nation.

The Van Buren papers raise many objections to the Circular in question. They affect the greatest horror, that it should have been marked "Confidential." Had they not better reserve their horror for the contemplation of the fact, that their friends "robbed the mail" to get hold of it? And does not the fact that they did thus rob the mail, justify, nay, even imperiously require, every honest man to use every possible precaution, to enable his communications to pass unembezzled through the post offices, to their destination?

But, again, it is objected that we, the undersigned, are the editors of "The Old Soldier," as it is urged appears from this confidential Circular. This assumption the Circular does not warrant. In it, we say "the Old Soldier" will be superintended by us. Of course we are responsible for its contents; and we desire to shun no part of the responsibility, arising from its management. But while we say this, we also say to the friends of Gen. Harrison every where, that they, as well as we, are the editors of "the Old Soldier." And we now invite them—particularly those who have seen Gen. Harrison, where cowards dared not show their heads—where storms of "leaden rain and iron hail" carried death and desolation in their course—where his erect figure, stationed on the loftiest rampart, and seen from every part of the theatre of action; and his voice, rising in trumpet tones above the roaring of the death-dealing tempest,—gave "form and spirit to the war;" them, we invite to aid us, in filling its columns with such "burning truths" and "confounding arguthe ears of the Old hero's thousand-tongued calumniators.

What credit or discredit "the Old Soldier" may derive from our names, is not for us to determine. We have not thrust those names upon the public; but now that our enemies have, we only say: "Then they are; let those assail them who can." Upon the authority of those names, (whether that authority be good or bad,) we assure the readers of "the Old Soldier," that nothing shall appear in its columns, as facts, which we do not, on the fullest investigation in our power to make, believe to be true. No "vile falsehood" shall enter them. It is our intention, that our friends every where may, without fear of successful contradiction, repeat whatever they may find, stated as a fact, in the columns of "the Old Soldier."

But the Van Buren papers object to the friends of Gen. Harrison organizing. We urge that organization; and we insist that it is not for our opponents to inveigh against it. They set us the example of organization; and we, in self defence, are driven into it. If they now wish disbanding, let them again set the example. Let them disband their double-drilled army of "forty thousand office holders," a part of whose regular tactics it is, to pilfer letters and papers from the mails, lest the old soldiers, who have fought and bled with Gen. Harrison, may all learn that he is now a candidate for the Presidency.

With our own friends, we justify—we urge—organization on the score of necessity. A disbanded yeomanry cannot successfully meet an organized soldiery.

The old soldiers of the war of 1812-13-and '14, remember, that previous to that war, there was no organization amongst them; but that, immediately on learning that an organized foe was invading their land, they, too, organized—met—conquered—killed and drove the foe beyond the "world of waters." To those old soldiers we say—An organized army of office-holders is now fitting out an expedition against your old commander. They are coming armed—(not with bristling steel, because that bedazzles their eyes—not with powder and balls, because the smell of sulphur offends their nostrils, but) with falsehood, slander, and detraction, upon the characters of yourselves and your chieftain, established in the hard and bloody conflicts with your country's invading enemies. That army too, must be met. Organization must again be had. We, your sons and younger brothers, will form the rank and file; you shall be the generals, and commanders-in-chief. Thus organized, we will meet, conquer and disperse Gen. Harrison's and the country's enemies, and place him in the chair, now disgraced by their effeminate and luxury-loving chief.

ANECDOTE OF GENERAL HARRISON.—When old Tippecanoe was in command of Fort Meigs, General Proctor demanded the surrender of his "little fort of mud," on the ground of his vastly superior force. Tell General Proctor," said the fearless pung Virginia volunteer, "that I know my strength and I know his; if he takes the fort, he will take it in a way that will do him more honor than a thousand surrenders."

Which is the Federalist—which is the Abolitionist—Gen. Harrison or Martin Van Buren?

Those who read the Van Buren papers of the day, cannot have failed to observe, that their conductors, determined to prostrate Gen. HARRISON at all events, and, having no charges founded in truth to make against him, fill their columns with the cries of Federalist! Federalist! Abolitionist! Abolitionist! This course of their's, leads us, to seek out the proper answer to the question at the head of this article—"Which is the Federalist—which the Abolitonist—General Harrison or Mr. Van Buren?

Though it is the latter in the question, we will first enquire which is the abolitionist?

About the year 1820, the Missouri Territory formed for herself a State Constitution, and asked the Congress of the United States to be admitted into the Union. This Constitution admitted slavery. Immediately the members of Congress, and the people throughout the Nation, took sides, and arrayed themselves most fiercely on the question of admitting Missouri, those in favor of excluding slavery questions from Congress, and leaving them to the States, in favour of the admission; and those in favour of the unconditional Abolition of slavery at whatever hazard, against it.

Never was a political conflict in this country so fierce or so fearful. Many of the wisest and best men in the Nation, gave up all for lost. They despairingly, though confidently predicted, that the Union must be blown into a thousand fragments by a final explosion of its excited and angry elements. Among those who viewed this question as most momentous and alarming, was the immortal THOMAS JEFFERSON. He wrote letters to individuals in all parts of the nation, expressing his great apprehension of the destruction of the Union, and urging them by all his powers of argument and weight of character, as the only means of preserving that Union, to do their utmost to have the Missouri Constitution accepted.

While this question—this truly Abolition question;—this only question by which the doctrines of Abolitionism were ever brought to a direct issue, was distracting the Nation—where were Gen. Harrison and Mr. Van Buren; and how were they acting? Gen. Harrison was in the Ohio State Senate, voting against the Abolitionists, for the admission of Missouri: Mr. Van Buren was in the New-York Senate, voting with the Abolitionists, instructing and requesting the New York Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote against her admission.

For the truth of what we here say as to Gen. Harrison's course on this question, we refer the reader to the Journals of the Ohio Senate for 1820 and '21; and as to that of Mr. Van Buren, to the proceedings of the Journals of the New York Senate.

Which, then, is the Abolitionist?

We now enquire which is the Federalist? No question has ever more clearly shown who belonged to the Republican party, and who to the Federal, than that of the last war with Great Britain—the Republicans being for the war, and the Federalists against it.—On that question what were the parts respectively taken by Gen. Harrison and Mr. Van Buren? By the War President, Mr. Madison, General Harrison was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the North-Western army, took command of it, successfully defended Fort Meigs through two sieges made by a combined army of British and Indians; and finally closed the War in that quarter by overhauling that combined army on the river Thames, dispersing the Indians, and killing their Chief Tecumseh; capturing the whole British force, and compelling their commander, General Proctor, to seek personal liberty, by deserting them, and escaping singly on horseback. This, briefly, is the part Harrison took.

We now turn to Mr. Van Buren. On the 3d of March, 1813, Mr. Madison's first term of service, as President, expired, and during the autumn previous, an election was held to choose a President for the succeeding term. The Republican party put up Mr. Madison for re-election; and the Federal anti-war party put up De Witt Clinton, in opposition to him. Mr. Van Buren supported and voted for Mr. Clinton—thus acting with the Federalists upon the most pertinent Republican and Federal issue that has ever been made before the nation. Afterwards, in 1814, and while Mr. Van Buren was a member of the New York Senate, a proposition was before that body for raising troops in aid of the war, and he voted against that proposition.

For the proof of this last fact see the Journal of the New York Senate for September, 1814.

The foregoing are the facts upon which the question at the head of this article may properly be decided.

With you, Old Soldiers—you, who, with Harrison, defended the North-Western frontier amidst the frosts and snows of a Canadian winter, while Van Buren, by his opposition to Madison, endeavored to strike nerveless the arm that supported you;—you who saw, amidst the triumphant yell of savages, your companions in arms, butchered like beeves in a slaughter pen, while Van Buren, in the warm halls of legislation, was voting against sending you assistance;—you, who, with Harrison, were adjusting cartridge boxes, and musket locks, and snuffing gun-powder; while Van Buren was adjusting ruffles, and whiskers, and snuffing cologne water—with you, we say, we most proudly leave this question, not the least distrusting the decision you will give it. [Old Soldier.

GENERAL HARRISON IN THE GREEN MOUNTAINS.

The Montpelier Watchman says:—Another large Harrison meeting was holden in Windham County, at Townshend, on the 16th.—A district meeting is to be holden at Rockingham on the 25th of February, and the People of the Connecticut river valley are to have a general meeting at Claremont, N. H. on the 5th of February. Good—old Windham grows stronger and stronger in the great cause.

The meeting at Northfield on Tuesday was very large, and one of the best political meeting we ever attended. Mr. Herrich, of Randolph, who served eight years under Washington, was present and raised his patriotic voice for Harrison.

"The Log Cabin Candidate."

Some unreflecting individuals, have referred in derision to Gen. Harrison as an "obscure county clerk," whose claims to public consideration ought to have been well satisfied with "a log cabin and a barrel of hard cider." We do not mean to object to such sneers. Poverty is always an honorable legacy when acquired in defence of one's country, or in the faithful and honest execution of the public trusts. And his opponents are welcome to all the political capital they will be able to make out of the humble occupation and humbler means of the war worn veteran of the West. But if they mean by such references to convey the impression that General Harrison's poverty detracts from his services
