A few weeks before he wrote, he had buried his eldest son, a fine, manly little fellow, of some eight years of age, who had never, he said, known a day's illness, until that which finally removed him hence to be here no more' His death occurred under circumstances peculiarly painful to his parents .-A younger brother, a delicate, sickly child from its birth, the next in age to him, had been down for nearly a fortnight with an epidemic fever. In consequence of the nature of the disease, every precaution had been aof this one, the father's eldest, he said he had but little fear, so rugged was he, and so generally healthy. Still, however, he kept a vigilant eye upon him, and especially forbade his going into the pools and docks near his school, which it was the custom sometimes to visit; for he was but a boy, and boys will be boys,' and we ought more frequently to think that it is their nature to be. Of all natural things, a reproach almost to childish frankness and innocence, save me from a boy man!' But to the story :

One evening this unhappy father came home wearied with a long day's labor and vexed at some little disappointment, which had soured his natural kind disposition, and rendered him peculiarly susceptiole to the smallest annoyance. While he was sitting by the very gray. He grew silent and sad, and fire in this unhappy mood of mind, his wife entered the apartment and said:

'Harry has just come in, and he is a perfect fright; he is covered from head to foot with dock mud, and he it as wet as a drown-

'Dear, brave boy!' exclaimed the bereaved father; and this was the explanation which I refused to hear!' And hot and bitter tears rolled down his cheeks.

Yes, that stern father now learned, for the first time; that what he had treated with unwonted severity as a fault, was but the impulse of a generous nature, which, forgetful of self, hazarded life for another. It was but the quick prompting of that manly spirit which he himself had always endeavored to graft upon his susceptible mind, and which, young as he was, had always manifested it self on more than one occasion.

Let me close this story in the words of that

> THE DYING PARROT.—Every admirer of the poet Campbell will remember his fine lines in the ballad entitled The Parrot. 'The origin of this ballad was as follows: A young sailor from South America had presented his sweetheart in Scotland with a beautiful parrot, which became a much petted favorite of the family of the lady. He learned a little of following stretched across Broadway :the Scotch dialect, of which he made liberal use, and he could besides imitate the cries of animals, the voices of the servants, -and could laugh, whistle and scold first rate. But at length old age overtook him; his memory failed and his green plumage changed to a sil would sit moping and mute on his perch, till the family, and going up to the cage addressed the aged bird in his own once familiar Span
